Land of losers!

America

2005 December 1

It was a brilliant morning. The morning was replete with excitement and was incredibly shiny, the trees on the street had made the day spectacular. "You know one day you step out and you don't exactly know what the world has to offer" one gentleman said while passing through the door. It is 2005, and thousands of people have come for the remembrance of the one who once was called "the mother of the freedom movement." She was a medium height black woman. There was nothing special about her indeed, she was surprisingly typical. There was not a single thing that she could have been proud of.

1995 May 2

She got dressed, she felt quite anxious, "there is nothing to be worried about" she thought, almost nothing. It was too late. She left the house as soon as possible. One minute late, one dollar left. That was what mangers say at workplace.

Taking the bus is a crucial part of the life of a worker, it somehow shows where you belong and what your class is in the society. Rosa was 42 and it was only 1955.

You become who your society wants.

The same morning, a little darker, as a bus driver James Blake needed to wake up early in the morning almost earlier than everybody. He was stunned but aware enough that he has to wake up at 5 sharp. The time you wake up in the morning somehow shows where you belong and what your class is in the society. The shirt wasn't ironed again. He thought how unlucky he was, he always obeyed the law, sometimes even more he made others follow the rules but he never had something he wanted to have, not even close. "However, there is always something that you can be grateful for." he thought, like he was a white man, he wasn't black. If he were a black man he could've never gotten this job and the bus. Yeah, the job was monotonous and on Mondays, grueling, but at least he could feed his children and accommodate what his wife asked him. He got on the bus. It was 6 o'clock in the morning. No one was on the street.

Things change. Nothing remains the same.

Who would have thought a lawyer and a pacifist, an unassuming man, would have the power to topple a vast empire. Yet Mahatma Gandhi made it. You never know what is going to happen, you will probably change the world or change someone's life or at least change your own life in ten years' time. The funny part of being a human being is that everything is possible. You may become a president or the one who discovers a totally new particle of the atom. You may never believe what your capability is. Once a scientist invented the microwave machine over a melted chocolate bar. Or Mr. King, who has been known for his frenetic speeches was never good at lecture in school. A lot of things happen serendipitously. We all have heard "you need to be in the right place at the right time". To me, it sounds just hilarious. You need to carry chocolate in your pocket and go to your lab, "it is the right time and this is the right place."
