

Johnny Depp, an actor, a producer and an impresario was once accosted by a woman who had some very personal pictures of him. She asked for money. Johnny Depp rejected the extortion attempt immediately and even offered help to release the pictures much to her chagrin. Depp obviously felt that adverse criticism, fame or infamy were assets for a public figure.

From Depp's points of view it wasn't harmful to be in the spotlight and rabble-rousers and bigots could write and say whatever they fancied. In other words "attention is the asset."

Later the blatant bigot with her tiny entourage found it easy to attract publicity through appearing on newspapers and TV shows. The funny part is newspapers gave space to the virulent activities of those agitators. Once a TV show which sought for sensationalism asked them to show up on a live TV show. A lot of people said it exposed the audience to the venom they spew forth.

Interestingly, a lot of people are loath to accept that these bigots are harmful to the society. Dr. Robert advocates the "quarantine method". His plan is to give such groups no publicity and ignore them, so without the warmth of the spotlight the bigot will freeze and become ineffectual.

Dr. Robert urges to scrutinize the nefarious activities of hate-mongers to furnish information about them to amicable society. Bigger than the vexatious immediate problem we need to find out what is the cause of this sinister malady that afflicts a segment of our society. For those pictures Johnny Depp became more famous. Some believe Johnny had hired a paparazzi and made up a story to become an overnight sensation. The release was never widespread but the ironic part is a lot of people seek for fame or infamy in other words they like to be known at any price. Being reputable or notorious when it comes to Instagram may not be so distinguishable.