

The Grandpa of the Century!

Gabriel McCarthy went shopping and never came back. Nobody could find him and all the effort was fruitless. The family asked the police and also asked people for help. The story was poignant enough to persuade everybody to help them find the grandpa. The grandpa was an old soldier so it made him more special.

When they let people know about the story everybody wanted to help. So the police station was inundated with phone calls. People wanted to help but the information they gathered and gave to the family was garbled. Nobody knew what to do. But everybody knew that they should remain sanguine.

The normally phlegmatic British were deeply engaged. There was some evidence that showed the grandpa was stolen with some gold from home and the missing gold and the bloody bed, corroborated the theory but nobody was sure to take any actions. At the suggestion of some friends, they organized a comprehensive search party, zealously searching they knocked on every door literally, but all came back empty-handed. The family members were all heartbroken they were so sad that they had to be coerced into going to sleep. 156 hours elapsed, five dead bodies were found but none of them was Gabriel. They went to different places searching meticulously and getting nothing. The family considered themselves as lax and negligent. It was Wednesday and the grandpa hadn't come back. The domicile was like a graveyard. Grandpa was used to leaving home to go shopping and walking sporadically but it was almost a week.

The gold and the money stolen from the house were the last thing the family thought about. But the rash conjecture about the grandpa being stolen turned out to be a little too silly. The grandpa was seen and recognized in Las Vegas. The doubts about the grandpa were all obviated as it turned out the 84 year-old McCarthy had stolen about 89000 dollars and later on it was revealed that the family knew at the first place that the grandpa was not stolen, but he stole the money and had gone. But they found it too humiliating to let everybody know that Gabriel McCarthy the one who fought for the country's freedom was a total jerk and stole the family's emergency fund.

McCarthy was found and caught while he had almost spent 44000 dollars and New York time quipped the McCarthy the grandpa of the century, so it was done and people should search for other lurid happenings.
